

BSc (Hons) Economics

The world of business is becoming ever more complex and it is important for potential graduates to understand how the global economy functions and to gain an understanding of the theoretical models and concepts that govern economic policy around the world.

Economists analyse the allocation, distribution and use of scarce resources, and seek to develop an understanding of output, employment, income, trade and finance.

Economics is one of the central disciplines that underpin the study of business and management. A degree in economics will enable you to abstract, analyse, deduce and quantify complex business and social issues and provide you with significant employment opportunities in a variety of careers in addition to working as a professional economist.

How can I study this degree?

The Greenwich School of Management (GSoM) BSc (Hons) programmes are delivered full-time, with three intakes per year in October, February and June. This degree is available to study as an accelerated two calendar year programme or alternatively, more traditionally over three calendar years.

Our two year degree is particularly attractive if you wish to complete your studies more quickly enabling you to enter the work place a year ahead of your contemporaries. This is achieved by studying 3 semesters per year instead of the usual 2. The traditional three year programme may be a better option if you would like to enhance your learning by gaining work experience during the longer break periods or simply wish to enjoy a longer break between your studies.
